PRESS RELEASE

Communis is to strengthen senior management team

Communis, the print and business process outsourcer, has strengthened its management team with the appointment of Alistair Blaxill from Hewlett Packard.

Alistair will join the Group in March 2007 as Managing Director responsible for many of its major customer relationships.

During his time at Hewlett Packard, Alistair was Director of Technology Services for the UK and Ireland, responsible for the delivery of all IT services to Hewlett Packard's corporate and enterprise customers, worth about $600m per annum.

His skills particularly include the implementation of account management and building relationships with large customers across many industry sectors.

Communis CEO, Steve Vaughan, commented: "In December I spoke about the need to invest in operational and account management disciplines in order to bring greater customer focus to Communis. Alistair's appointment is an important step in this direction - his experience will add to our customer relationship skills and greatly enhance our senior management team. We are delighted he is joining us."

Alistair Blaxill added: "Communis enjoys a strong position in each of the specific areas in which it operates. The opportunity to exploit the combination of those business offerings to its excellent customer base has not yet been widely exploited. The Company is keen to provide customers with a lot of additional business benefit that way. This is what attracted me to Communis. I looking forward to helping Steve and the management team lead the company in exploiting this opportunity."
